Meg Evershed of The Nutmeg Company presents 40 new three-dimensional cross stitch card designs in this enhanced ebook with video clips to demonstrate techniques. The imaginative designs are stitched on perforated paper, which can be folded and cut out to produce freestanding 3D cards, plus gift bags and boxes. An ideal ebook for cross stitchers looking to develop their craft. Stitch the cards from the charts supplied on the CD - they are easy to print out on a home printer. There are cards for special occasions such as an anniversary, new baby, moving home, retirement, wedding or Christmas, plus invitations, and cards that are perfect for personal messages.

this book has integrated video clips demonstrating techniques and ... in-book links that take you with ease from one section to the other... the cards are truly stunning. Each project links to the techniques you'll need, provides a list of what you'll need (including the thread colours), step by step instructions, a chart and a photo of the finished card so you know what you are aspiring to. They include colour and stitch variations of many of the cards to show how they can be used for different occasions by just making a small change. There's a useful section at the back of the book talking you through the equipment you will need and what to do with it. There are also alphabets and numbers at the end of the book so you can create your own personal message to go on the front of the cards. There are also more techniques at the back of the book, guiding you through the different stitches, as well as a trouble shooting section. If you are looking to make cross stitch cards I think this book is ideal, and the video clips would give you more guidance that you would get from a paper book. - The Sewing Directory Meg Evershed is the queen of constructional cross stitch with her clever designs worked on perforated paper.
