About the Author Steven Robert Carroll Artist Story It was the best of times; it was the worst of times. The year was 2011. December 22nd was a joyous occasion, because my daughter, Madison, was born. Little did I know that only two days later, Christmas Eve, everything would change. That day, I was admitted to the hospital with a heartbreaking diagnosis. My kidney function had dropped below 15%, and I would need to start dialysis immediately as I began the long wait for a kidney donor. My treatment involved spending 12 hours a week at the dialysis clinic. As I endured the physical pain of my treatments, I also experienced emotional pain. I felt hopeless as I was stuck in a chair three days a week for four hours at a time. I felt as if I was surrounded by a slow death, and wondered if I would be able to watch my daughter grow up. Although I felt low, I did not give up. I wanted to share a life with my young family. One day, to pass the time, I decided to sketch a trash can in the clinic. I thought, That is not that bad, since I had no previous art experience. So then I drew other images from the clinic. My wife saw my drawings and encouraged me to keep on drawing. The first images were somewhat dark. (I eventually burned them). Next, I started drawing butterflies, because I think they represent hope. I got even more satisfaction as I began to realize that I am a good guy who deserves a good life. My images evolved into what I create today. They represent all the magnificent colors that make up white light. At first, I wanted my pictures to represent my feelings and what I was going through. Then something changed; I began creating something to inspire others. I realized that this is what I want to do with my art; To inspire others, to give hope, to help others realize their greater selves To discover who they truly are.
