Approaches to the Study of Attic Vases: Beazley and Pottier (Oxford Monographs on Classical Archaeology):

This book examines the ways in which Attic painted vases were interpreted by Edmond Pottier (1855-1934), founder of the Corpus Vasorum Antiquorum, and John Beazley (1885-1970), the master of attributions in the twentieth century. The comparison shows two markedly different approaches, one primarily archaeological, the other centered on the history of ancient art.

`... through this work, Rouet reveals himself to be remarkably well versed in theoretical approaches in general as well as in scholarship focusing on the history of art and classical studies.' Bryn Mawr Classical `...should be read by advanced students and any scholar concerned with the analysis of material culture.' Classical World About the Author Philippe Rouet is a Lecturer in Classical Art, Centre Nationale de la Recherche Scientifique.
